We have implemented many new gameplay innovations that bring the real feeling of FIFA 20 to the next level and ensure that we are best equipped to deliver the most authentic, realistic and enjoyable experience. For example, we have reworked the way we calculate the acceleration and deceleration of players, and we have rebuilt the underlying physics system that makes this possible. The result is that players accelerate and decelerate more realistically, while the new momentum system allows them to be really affected by small, sudden changes in momentum. We have also made key changes to the artificial intelligence that makes players more intelligent in defensive situations and smart in possession and attack. The impact of these changes can be seen when players' movements are made more reactive to changes in situations and momentum. You can expect to see players keep possession, move the ball into the final third more often and create more chances. The physics system has seen a number of important updates. The player is now much more responsive to acceleration and force. There are fewer random effects on movement caused by collisions, and the mass and density of the player have been adjusted to better reflect the height and weight of athletes in real life. The hit mechanic has also been given a makeover.

Players are more vulnerable to hits, and there are now more realistic reactions to being hit. For example, when players receive a knock, it is now possible to see the ball leave the foot of the opponent. Players no longer stutter on their movement as a result of being hit, and if you receive a knock when defending, the player maintains his or her balance and is never airborne. When a player strikes another player with a slide tackle, the player is automatically knocked over. When players are hit with headers, the ball is always removed from the player's feet (even on the ground). Additional changes have been made to the defence system, including a comprehensive set of defensive fouls, new penalty and free-kick situations and many defensive challenges. All defensive challenges are now replaced with yellow cards, and a defensive foul ensures that the player's movement is completely interrupted. There are now more challenge animations for fouls and offside situations in order to create more player possibilities. For example, an offside tackle can create an advantage for the attacker to either pass or dribble past the offside player. The behaviour of a player on an offside situation is now more realistic. The physical state of players is also reflected in their post-match ratings, ensuring
